Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Speech of Mr. Forsyth, of Georgia: On the Bill Providing for the Removal of the Indians, Delivered in the Senate of the United States, May, 1830 I regret, Mr. President, that the amendment to the bill, proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, is not more definite and precise. His explanation of its purpose is not more satisfactory than the amendment itself, and it is only by looking to his speech that we are relieved from embarrassment. His amendment and explanation leave us to conjecture whether he intends that the United States shall interfere with the Indians in the old States north of the Roanoke or not. His speech was plain enough. The Indians in New York, New England, Virginia, c. c. are to be left to the tender mercies of those States, while the arm of the General Government is to be extended to protect the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and especially the Cherokees, from the anticipated oppressions of Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia We thank the gentleman for his amiable discrimination in our favor. He,...
